

Kudos to Saluja and Kamboj!

It seems IJGP has now arrived on the knowledge publishing highway. Volume I had many teething troubles including the statutory and the production-related with print readership remaining within five hundred. Incidentally, at that point of time we didn't have statistics for online users, hence, with no clue about online viewer-ship.

Now, with the changed online platform, as I am writing this editorial (2 pm on 22/7/2008) the online ticker indicates view count for Volume II issue 1 being 17851 and 15794 for the issue 2. A massive growth of more than 30 times, and it's just the beginning! 'Ageratum conyzoides L.: A review on its phytochemical and pharmacological profile' of Saluja and Kamboj is on the top of the journal's all-time top 10 list with 22/7/2008 2 pm data being 3929. Before the Issue 2 was out, my editorial enjoyed topping the list. However, now I am feeling belittle before Saluja and Kamboj with my count being less than 20% of that of theirs.

Above numbers indicate that the IJGP has really started getting good articles, referees are reviewing critically and Associate Editor Mr. Swapnadeep Parial is extending no favours by compromising the peer-review process. I also get a special sense on noticing that the Volume 2 Issue 2 did not have any article from the host institution (B R Nahata College of Pharmacy). The editorial team is thankful to all those who are considering IJGP for the submission of their quality work and over 200 international referees who are tirelessly supporting the IJGP's peer-review process. We are working-out recognition or reward to the authors and referees on the basis of the article's popularity and quality. Please do keep checking the statistics. Suggestions for the reward/recognition are welcome.
